Infant walker warning

The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) is reminding parents that infant walkers are not safe. They cause more than 2,000 emergency room visits each year.

New walkers are wider than a standard doorway or have a safety brake to stop them from rolling down stairs. But even with these safety features, infants still are falling down stairs or out of walkers. Some infants also have been hit or burned when trying to reach objects such as pot handles.

Parents should note that walkers do not help a child learn to walk, according to the AAP. Consider stationary activity centers as a safer alternative to wheeled infant walkers.
